

AMBROSE SHAW DEAD

He Was One of the Men Who Built
Up Ogden.

Ambrose Shaw, one of the early pioneers of Utah and Weber county, died this morning at the family residence, 1265 Washington avenue, of diabetes, at the advanced age of 82 years. The deceased was one of the best and most widely known men in the state.

He was born at Victor, New York, September 12, 1824, and lived in that state until the time he left for the west. He was a member of one of the first handcart companies to cross the plains, and remained in Salt Lake two years, after which he came to Ogden, where he has since resided. He was married on January 22, 1846, to Miss Permella Dunn, who died in 1871, and was again married January 1st, 1875, to Minerva Stone, who, together with four children, Ambrose A., Ernest, Merlin and Olive Rhesessa, survive him. The time and date of the funeral will be announced later.

During his lifetime Mr. Shaw was an active figure in business circles and did much for the upbuilding of Weber county and Ogden City, and he will be greatly missed by the older generation, as well as by his relatives and friends.
